A man was walking along a beach with a friend. There had been a storm the night before and thousands of starfish were stranded on the beach, unable to get back to the water.

The man began picking up starfish and throwing them back into the ocean.

His friend said, "What are you doing? There are thousands of starfish on the beach. You can't possibly get them all back in the water. Why waste your time? You won't make a difference."

The man looked at his friend, picked up a starfish, and threw it back into the ocean. All he said was, "I made a difference to that one."

In our lives, we encounter many other people and have many chances to impact their lives. Don't wait for opportunities to make a huge impact on the world. Do what you can in your own community, and you might make an difference on someone who really needs it.
